Field Trip For Primary Students

Field trips play an important role in the learning process at Appomattox Primary School.

These students traveled to St. Ann's Episcopal Church on Thursday, November 9th. Mr. Maury People discussed the Episcopal Church so the students could better understand the religion of the early settlers at Jamestown.

Traveling with this group were Mrs. Luella Coleman, teacher of these fourth year students; and three parents of the children, Mrs. Edward McCoy, Mrs. Robert Lawhorn and Mrs. Floyd Eggleston.

Homemaker Hints

by Rebecca M. Johnson,

With the Thanksgiving season getting closer, meal planning for the big day may mean some extra hard thinking on the cook's part. Remember the sweet potato and the variety it may add to your menu.

Here are some ways to enjoy your sweet potatoes:

1. In the Jacket – most recipes call for sweet potatoes cooked first in their jackets. The thin skin of the cooked potato is easy to remove and leaves most of the goodness to enjoy. If, for a special dish, you do peel first, peel thin just before you cook them. If you must peel ahead of time, put the pared sweet potatoes in salted water to keep them from darkening. Cook sweet potatoes quickly. Serve piping hot so there's little chance for air to rob their good store of Vitamin C. Keep leftovers in the refrigerator until their second appearance.

2. Boiled in Jackets – Scrub well, and boil in water just covering until tender. Drain at once so they won't get waterlogged. Peel and season with table fat or meat dripping; salt and pepper to taste.

3. Whipped – Peel hot cooked potatoes, mash thoroughly and quickly. Add seasoning and table fat, and beat in warm milk a little at a time until they're fluffy and smooth.

For variety, serve in the following way: Shape seasoned, mashed sweet potatoes into mounds, make a small well in center, and brown at 425 degrees. Fill the well with cranberry sauce or jelly and serve hot. Or, use orange juice in place of milk, add a little grated orange rind, table fat, and a few raisins. If desired, place in a baking dish, top with meringue and brown lightly at 325 degrees. Serve hot.

4. Baked – Wash and dry sweet potatoes of uniform size. Bake until tender at 325 degrees, 35 to 60 minutes, depending on size. If you want the skin to be soft, rub a little fat on them before baking.

Cut crisscross gashes in the skin of the baked sweet potato on one side then pinch them so that some of the soft inside pops up through the opening.

Save fuel by baking sweet potatoes when you oven-cook other foods. A little extra time will allow them to bake.

5. Stuffed Sweet Potatoes – If the skins are not to thin and the inside not too moist, baked sweet potatoes are delicious stuffed.

Cut large baked potato in half lengthwise. Carefully scoop out the inside, leaving a little as lining for the skin. Mash as for mashed sweet potatoes, adding seasoning and warm milk. Stuff back into the shells, brush top with melted fat, and reheat at 425 degrees.

For variety, add chopped leftover meat or chopped peanuts. Or add a tablespoon of peanut butter for each sweet potato in place of the fat, or a little grated orange rind and orange juice in place of the milk.

6. Scalloped Sweet Potatoes with Apples – Place alternate layers of sliced cooked sweet potatoes and sliced raw apples in a greased baking dish. Sprinkle the apple layers with sugar and a little salt, and dot with fat. Add just enough hot water to cover the bottom of the dish, and bake covered at 375 degrees for 30-40 minutes or until apples are tender. You may want to cover the dish the last 15-20 minutes of cooking, and top with crushed dry breakfast cereal or bread crumbs. You may use sliced raw sweet potatoes, but will need to bake longer.

For variety, try peeled orange slices, whole cranberry sauce, or sliced fresh pears in place of apples. With pears, use brown sugar, instead of granulated sugar, for added flavor.

For a main dish, use chopped cooked ham in place of the apples, omit sugar and bread crumbs. Bake 20-30 minutes or until hot.

For a different flavor, use chopped roasted peanuts instead of apples, and omit fat and bread crumbs. If nuts are salted, omit salt. Bake 20-30 minutes.

HAPPY THANKSGIVING!

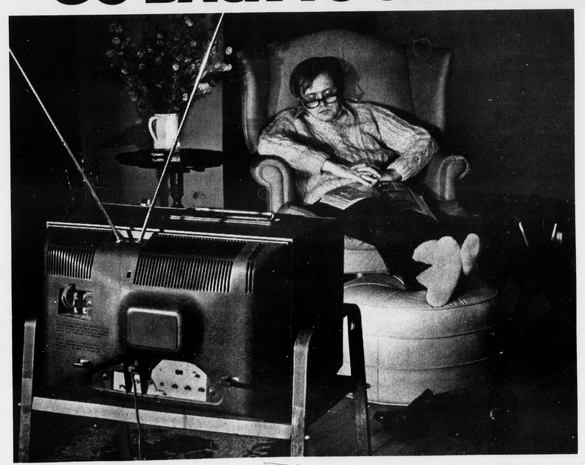
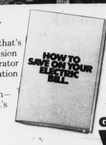
GEORGE, TURN OFF THE TV AND GO BACK TO SLEEP.


And rest assured you'll be getting more for your money electrically.

Because it isn't the economical electricity you use that's expensive; it's the electricity you waste. Like the television set that's turned on when you're tuned out. The refrigerator door you forgot to close when you took a ten o'clock station break. Those lights that are still on in the next room.

Electrical wastes like these – and how to stop them – are the whole idea behind a brand-new free booklet that's available from your nearest Vepco office right now.



We want you to enjoy the economy, as well as the convenience, of electricity, and "How to Save on Your Electric Bill" is full of simple money-saving ideas on everything from heating the house to washing the dishes – ideas you don't have to be an electrical engineer to use. We hope you'll come in or call for a copy first thing tomorrow.

It can open your eyes to some waste-saving opportunities you never dreamed of tonight.
